PORTABLE WIRELESS BOON TO GERMANS

Radio Outfits in Field Can Be Set Up and Used in Fifteen Minutes.

BERLIN (By Mail to New York) Sept. 17.-Portable wireless telegraph outfits have proved a boon to the German armies in the field. These outfits have eliminated the old field telegraph systems, which were so tedious to lay and which, when strung through a hostile country, were so easily cut and put nently established lines of communication are the lines laid for telegraphic and telephonic purposes.

In other countries the armies have not solved the problem of portable wireless equipments. They are still cumbrous and far from easily handled; they also do not always give the service needed, and are easily put out of com-The short range equipment carried by the German field forces can be transported by a motorcyclist miles a day. Long range equipment carried thirty miles in twenty-four hours by a man and a horse. The short range instruments will send and re-ceive over an average of thirty-five miles, where the country is not hilly, Larger sizes will carry a distance of 180 miles unless the topography of the country interferes.

Set Up In Fifteen Minutes.

The instruments can be set up and ready for transmission of messages thin fifteen minutes of their arrival at any point. They can be taken down and made ready for transportation in from eight to ten minutes.

To return to the matter of transport ing the equipment it might be added that in country where neither horse nor motor propelled vehicle can travel, it is carried by men on specially constructed imboo "stretchers."

The regular "wireless crew" consists of seven men and two officers. Two look after the horses, five are employed in setting up the equipment or dis-manteling it, and the two officers send nd receive messages. The mast is of aluminum alloy is built in eight sections each six feet long, provided with slip joints. The mast first is joined together on the ground the guy ropes are attached, and the whole raised. The lower point is formed of a socket bedded in bitumen, which in turn is encased in a metal tube provided with a pointed shoe.

If the ground is too rocky to permit easy insertion, those members of the crew who are not generating elec-tricity or sending, hold the mast in position by means of the guy ropes. The aerial is very ingeniously devised It consists of a number of bronze wire conductors radiating out like the ribs of an inverted umbrella. These are accu-rately balanced and counterpoised, and the radiating wires are attached to in-sulators fastened near the bottom of the mast. Small Dynamo Available.

For sending purposes dry batteries of a special make are supposed to be used. but in case these are not available a small dynamo, coupled to a pedaling wrangement, forms part of the outfit. With this a man can easily drive the generator at a speed of 1,300 to 1,400 revolutions per minute, and so provide a current of one ampere at fifty volts. which is amply sufficient for sending hTe weight of dynamo and pedal drive is ninety-nine pounds and it is so arranged that it can be carried by one nan by means of straps, which fasten across the shoulders.

The transmitter and receiver, the latter of which is of the well-known "head-dress" pattern, are designed so as to be as light as possible, and it might be considered that a certain amount of efficiency has been sacrificed to obtain increased portability and ease

It is interesting to note that the wave length is about 35 meters, with a coup-ling of a per cent unvariable, and the equipment can exclude waves of 5 per ent variation.

The sending can be carried out with great rapidity, and the transmitting and receiving apparatus, without the mast and serial, weighs only eighty-five pounds.
